Some people refer to the holidays as the "Christmas season" while others will soon be hanging wreaths outside their doors instead of family pictures in their living rooms. There are going to be a lot of men, women, and children running around with a stiff neck and sore backs, and of course there is going to be turkey on their Thanksgiving plates. The turkey is a very popular bird. It's something we all enjoy being able to share together, and with it comes the tradition of the thanksgiving meal. The dinner is different for everyone but most share the same traditions and customs. Even if you are not a meat eater you still partake in what was once a big deal, for many it was a day to show your neighbors and family what they were thankful for. While the Thanksgiving holiday is a huge moment for families, it's one that is quickly becoming a tradition of its own. Many people now opt to do their holiday meal at home, and everyone shares their favorite recipes. The first official National Thanksgiving Day was celebrated on the 4th of November 1863. But in the first four years of the United States' existence, Thanksgiving took place at the end of October, and not the beginning of November. In 1895, Congress passed the Thanksgiving Act that made Thanksgiving the official American holiday. It also ended the practice of celebrating the holiday on the fourth Sunday in October, which began to replace the typical dates and days of Thanksgiving celebrations. As most of us know, the only days of the year that have been set aside for honoring the traditional American holiday is the fourth Thursday in November. In an effort to make it official and make us feel grateful for the lives we live, most U.S. states as well as the federal government holds some type of a celebration. The turkey
