#ARC002 "Arcanium Expedition Pack #ARC002 Treasures of the Ancient East Kitties!" Ketty was about to have another intense feline argument with the meaning of their collective growth and sharing of everything to eat, when an object came through to them; an object they did not want to miss out on this chance. It was the letter they had been waiting for all this time. Alan was elated; despite the usually cranky squirrel not being at the ville, they still managed to somehow send for them, which was quite an incredible achievement for such a small, old village. With great relief, Alan sat the day away, morning, noon, and night, he was so full of anticipation over the mystery of what was going to come to them next. The only problem Alan had was that he had now started seeing questionable, purple-eyed cats in every shadow as he wrestled up sleep, and it was no longer a worry of him, who was all on a high. Then, the feline rivalries finally kicked in as the bats returned again last night and, had a lot of teeth marks in the petals of all the flowers, orchids, and creepers that Ketty was so proud of in the sunny verandah garden of their ville. All the while, Ketty kept one thought in her head, that of a young sparrow asking for directions to where he could get himself a job, and a family. Alan, on the other hand, was nothing short of ecstatic about this letter and the news that it would bring, but his mind would not stop thinking about all of the possible things the letter could say. In the end, Alan chose to start without him. A very unusual choice for a blue-blackcat, as he had always prided himself to people as being a picky eater. Alan sat on the desk of his map room, thinking, and asking himself over and over again in his head what this letter could be about. It suddenly occurred to Alan that it could only be a delay in the time in which a zombie was to come for them. To be fair, he and Ketty knew that they could not fight a zombie by themselves. However, on the other side of the coin, it could be a real diamond in the rough, one that could be used to plan for a victory rather than just to meet the approaching zombie head

THAT WAS ONE ASS! May 12, 2008 I was on the phone with my daughter. She was on a phone call with her boyfriend who had what she called an ass. I told her it was one crazy ass! I laughed as I rambled on on how he could run back and forth between the guys and girls. I heard a thud on the floor. Thinking it was a couch falling to the ground I went to the living room. I turned to look at the couch. My daughter's boyfriend had bounced off of the couch with a thud and was standing up. I said in a cocky voice, "why are you on the floor? Did you get laid?" "Oh, well," he said as he started to walk towards his brother and sister, "He has an ass. It's like what you see." He said it in a matter of fact way. I looked at my daughter and rolled my eyes. She was mortified at the words coming from her boyfriend. He walked to his brother and sister. I thought he might try to make ammends by saying I had an ass, but he didn't. Then I said, "Why is it like what you see?" "Well," he said looking up at the ceiling, **
