A validated on-line system for determination of skin penetration of BCS class IV active pharmaceutical ingredients in cosmetic products. The direct measurement of the percutaneous absorption of chemicals is one of the main evaluation parameters for safe cosmetic products, but is usually not directly available. In this work, we present a validated on-line system for in vitro penetration determination of BCS class IV substances into the stratum corneum from cosmetics. The permeation rate of a large variety of substance classes, such as drugs, auxins, and estrogens, was established under standardised conditions. The time course and the relationship between permeability and physicochemical parameters were determined. In order to select the most promising substances for further in vivo studies, the permeation rate was compared with the in vivo data found in literature. The validity of the method was proven for substances with a reliable data base. This method is more efficient than established methods for in vivo penetration studies, since it can measure BCS class IV chemicals using a microsampling device, and is more appropriate to validate the combination of BCS class IV compounds with other substances.
