Psycho Bathroom is a fighting game that grapples with issues of alienation, and a gaming culture that is obsessed with being “the most addicting” or “beating the record”. It’s all about the main character, Red, who is a first time pro-gamer, though there are some questions raised about his gender identity. The world of the game is a trap, where the player must traverse the gameworld — a bathroom — finding opponents and then beating them. After each battle, the player can pick what skill they want to upgrade — from throwing the toilet, to having a penis tattooed on their arm. The potty training skill is hilarious, I even lost a whole day playing by way of bathroom breaks. There are eight playable characters of which five are revealed as the game progresses. They come from all walks of life, all genders, and all nationalities. The plot is thrown into further turmoil when you are tasked with discovering who is sabotaging the games and what their endgame is. It turns out the toilets exist to house yourself, in case you get stuck in it. The game has a rich character design, beautiful pixel art, and a unique style that involves interaction with the environment. In Psycho Bathroom you will play as a potty trainer, a French teacher, a prime minister, a child’s guide to potty training, and a man in a foxhole. This is a fighting game where players have a hand drawn pun art style, where they poke fun at their game. They try to engage the player emotionally and then destroy them psychologically. About the game: Psycho Bathroom is an exploration of issues that are deemed taboo in American culture. Featuring game play mechanics inspired by a combination of video games, fighting games, and making players question themselves. Play as your character and traverse the gameworld, an old bathroom, called the “Gingham Room”. The room randomly generates a fight and the players have to see if they can fight it off. This is a narrative experience where the player defeats enemies through psychological warfare, with a pixel art style that invokes a feeling of being “in the bathroom with you”. The player has to look at their choices and feelings to truly understand the story and complete the game. Are the issues explored taboo, or is it just a damn fun game? in the last two days i have played this game 9 times
