Two weeks ago, the MyEidoo message application was hacked by the Hacking Team, the Italian cybercrime company that has been known for its targets such as Iranian and Chinese dissidents. Hacking Team has been on the forefront of cybercrime for years by selling their spyware to companies like Facebook, WhatsApp, and Telegram. Their recent adventures in the dark net have been rather interesting, with the Hacking Team developing software that can be used to remotely spy on people on their own phones. The people who use these spyware apps often receive thousands of text messages and calls daily, and the inclusion of the MyEidoo message application makes it possible to see who else is using the app, and even the content of the messages. This is a major security risk for MyEidoo users, and the company has already made efforts to update their app for iOS and Android.

Lightroom has subsequently undergone a number of revisions to keep up with the latest in photography technology, and it has many features that help improve photo editing.
